School of International Studies

Jawaharlal Nehru University

New Delhi, Delhi, India

This series puts forth original research works on key politico-security and economic issues in Indo-Pacific debates. It aims to comprehensively assess the roles of the major international and regional stakeholders, their policies and postures and their politico-security engagements over key issues of the region. It includes coverage of the United States, China, Japan, India, the European Union as well as the middle powers of the region including Australia, Indonesia, Malaysia, South Korea, and ASEAN. Potential flashpoints in the region- the South China Sea dispute, Myanmar, Taiwan, and Cross-Strait relations – also figure in this series. It also covers issues relating to multilateralism and unilateralism in the region, environmental and economic security as well as the role of transnational actors and regional groupings. The series does not confine itself to a particular theoretical approach to international relations and aims to provide due space to non-Western approaches to international relations as well. The series aims to capture both the mega trends as well as new and emerging developments that might have an impact on the Indo-Pacific dynamics and regional order.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This compilation comes at a time when electoral politics across Asia reveal deepening tensions between democratic form and political practice. The coexistence of formal electoral structures with majoritarian and authoritarian tendencies raises critical questions about representation, legitimacy and power. The volume has been structured thematically around governance, identity and geopolitics to reflect these complexities through a comparative and contextually situated lens.

The editors are indebted to the contributors—Anindya Jyoti Majumdar, Souradeep Sen, Anup Shekhar Chakraborty, Soma Ghosal, Rahul Mishra, Srimanti Sarkar, Subhadeep Bhattacharya, Mohit Musaddi, Sanjay Pulipaka, Rashmi Doraiswamy and Jigme Yeshe Lama whose chapters bring together varied disciplinary perspectives and regional engagements. Their work has shaped the analytical and conceptual scope of this volume.

A number of the contributors have engaged with Asia in Global Affairs (AGA) in various capacities, and their sustained involvement through publications, seminars and collaborative initiatives has contributed to the broader intellectual context within which this volume has been conceived. The editors recognise the role of the Department of Political Science, St. Xavier's College (Autonomous), Kolkata, in co-hosting the academic workshop “2024: A Pivotal Year of Elections – Elections in Asia: Political Continuities, Disruptions, and Democratic Contestations” in collaboration with AGA. The discussions offered a valuable opportunity to reflect on many of the concerns explored in this volume.

The editors acknowledge the contribution of Aparajita Singh, Commissioning Editor at Springer Nature, for her support and attentive engagement throughout the editorial process. The editors also acknowledge the Springer publishing team for their efficient coordination of the production process.
